NSA Member
Calls for Purge

Members of the National Student association who "had anything to do with the central intelligence agency must be purged," a member of the NSA's 10-man supervisory board said today in Minneapolis.

Howard Kaibel, 22, also president of the Minnesota Student association, said the international credibility of the NSA was virtually destroyed by the admission Monday night that the organization received funds from the CIA.

He said a board meeting to try to hold the NSA together would be called as soon as possible, perhaps as early as Wednesday in Washington.

A spokesman for the NSA said from the early 1950s until 1965, the organization received a subsidy from the CIA, possibly amounting to as much as 3 million dollars.

The NSA is the nation's largest campus organization, with chapters in more than 300 U. S. colleges and universities.

Kaibel said he did not know what the CIA was attempting to learn from or through the NSA, and had no idea what the agency demanded of the student group in return for the funds.

Kaibel expressed concern over the CIA's encroachment into domestic affairs when, he said, its proper sphere of activity was overseas.
